

Short Review by Amanda Aitken

I have included some photo's from my first ever trip to the Bluesfest in 2010. I'd always wanted to go in previous years but could not get any of my friends to come with me. When another friend of mine arrived in Australia and I mentioned it to her, she jumped at the chance to. So, as soon as they were released we bought our buddy ticket. Of course, being new to the who experience we spent about ten minutes wondering... a) should we wait for an artist announcement and b) how many days should we get....

Then we quickly came to our senses and thought, it's Bluesfest, we don't need to wait, of course it's going to be amazing and we should absolutely get ALL days! Tickets bought and we were off.

When the day came to head to Byron, I was in such a rush, I hurriedly packed up the car and off we went. It wasn't until we arrived and set up camp that we realised we had forgotten a few essentials...namely food, water and pillows! That did nothing to dampen our spirits though...we were here!! Camp set up, however small and foodless, we put on our hats and went over to the show. The first tent we walked into was playing ALO and we were hooked!! The rest is Bluesfest history...we slept on bags of clothes, we bused it into town daily for food and we had an amazing time!!

Needless to say when the tickets were release last year there was no hesitation at all and I am looking forward to my third adventure in Byron in 2012!!
